YOUR FEEDBACK

Sebastian Archer

26 Sep 2021

your enterprise fuel:

The more you can use your motivation, self-belief and willingness to learn and change, the more you will be able to make things happen. It seems that at times you are able to apply your â€˜enterprise fuelâ€™ to the things you view as important but at other times, this drifts a little. Do you really know what your priorities are and do you focus upon them?

Motivation and Drive

You would like to achieve and do well. School is a way of making that happen, even though it isnâ€™t always what you want to be doing! If you have interests outside of school that you are motivated to do well in - great. Success in your career is probably important to you, even if you havenâ€™t decided what you want to do. You may get frustrated, fed-up or question if you can be bothered when things don't quite go the way you want or take longer than you want. At these times, keep going and you'll get there.

Capacity to Self Determine

You are realistic - some things are possible and others arenâ€™t. This is true, but maybe you are limiting yourself and not seeking to achieve in other areas of your life? Maybe you just need to be a bit more confident, persistent and determined. Trust yourself, know what you want and go for it. Focus upon achieving the things that are important to you â€“ success, fun, friendships etc. Being confident and determined makes all the difference.

Willingness to Learn

School and college can be fascinating but it does require you to continually learn new skills. Your feedback suggests you should be able to do this, if you view what you are learning as being worthwhile and in line with your aspirations. At times, you may not see the point in what you are doing or just get bored. If that happens, look at the longer-term benefits as this will motivate you and keep you going until you get into things you choose and really enjoy.

enterprise style

Introvert / Extrovert

Whilst you like to work alone or with a few friends, you also recognise the need to work with other people in teams and groups. The ability to work alone really helps when studying â€“ use it well. Have confidence in your decision-making ability and your thinking. At times, you will be required to work alongside others, especially when you begin to think about work and a job. Your style suggests a career that is a balance of spending time with people and working by yourself.

Starter / Finisher

New things interest you â€“ you like to get involved in new courses, projects and tasks, but you also recognise the need to finish things and do what you say you will. Well done â€“ this is so important when you are at school/college. Sometimes you may get bored and look for something new that is â€˜more interestingâ€™ to get involved in. This is OK, but avoid jumping from one thing to another without finishing any of them as well as you could.

Explorer / Focused

You have a wonderful potential to be able to think creatively whilst at the same time keep yourself organised. Usually people can do one or the other so this is a great strength to be proud of. Develop it and use it well. Creativity is a great skill and helps you solve all kinds of problems. Being organised is equally important because people know what to expect from you. When it comes to getting a job, this is a strength you might want to mention.

Opportunistic / Risk Avoider

â€˜Balancedâ€™ is how to describe your approach. Success at school is a matter of balancing your desire to do different things whilst at the same time doing what school requires â€“ you seem to be aware of these two challenges and able to address them well. On occasion, opportunistic people have a tendency to chase new opportunities even when there is no apparent point in doing so. Be aware of doing this and distracting yourself from your studies. You may place yourself under unnecessary pressure encouragers, support and obstacles

Self

You seem to have quite a good level of self-belief and confidence. A good sense of who you are and what you are good at and not so good at, will enable you to focus upon your strengths and develop new skills. At times, you may wish you were a little more confident or had greater self-belief. Donâ€™t worry about this - just remember that you may need to put a bit more effort into convincing yourself that you are actually capable of doing some of the things you are maybe backing away from. Success starts from inside.

Social

According to your responses, you view yourself as having access to a good network of supportive individuals â€“ these are the people who you can look to for advice and guidance. They may even be a useful source of emotional support. Do you make enough of these potentially very advantageous relationships? Do you call upon the support available to you and do you offer things back in return for the support you receive?

Skills

You describe yourself as having a range of skills, some of which you feel you are quite good at, but others you need to develop. Skills development is what education is all about. Learning where and when to apply the skills you develop is equally important. Itâ€™s not just a matter of applying skills to your academic work. You may find projects, sport, team work etc are areas you can excel within. At times, people are more motivated to develop new skills when they are doing things they find interesting. What do you find interesting?

Resources

Each of us has a certain amount of time and space within which to do the things we need to do. Your answers suggest you feel a little stretched here. How much does this affect your performance at school? Are you getting involved in too many things or just letting things drift a little? What can be done about it? Is this managing your time better or more about allocating enough time to your studies whilst maintaining an involvement in other things?

your teamrole is:

Energiser

Energiser

Energisers bring enthusiasm and energy to new projects and challenges. They initiate action and get things moving! They will inspire others to get involved and make things happen. They take on leading roles and like projects and jobs where they generate ideas, start things and then work with a team to make it happen. They can sometimes take on too much.

Independent Driver

Independent Drivers have a preference for working alone or in small groups and making their own decisions. This can lead to the development of specialist skills and a willingness to get on with a job without requiring the involvement of others. Specialist technical work and self-employment is a career route, as long as they ensure they involve other people.

Opportunist

Opportunists are spontaneous and can be a bit scatty. They see many ways forward, but arenâ€™t always sure which one to take. Opportunists can be great entrepreneurs as long as they eventually decide what they want to do and focus upon it. Careers with a certain amount of freedom and choice may appeal.

Creative Brainstormer

Creative Brainstormers are brilliant ideas people who like to explore all options. They can live in their heads and sometimes be a bit chaotic. They are unlikely to accept established ways of doing things and will see solutions that others do not. They can be excellent in roles that require ideas, novel solutions, design and creativity.

Risk Manager

Risk Managers protect. They make sure all the good work and effort leads to deserved success. They guard against unwise decisions and ask necessary questions to avoid making predictable mistakes. They have an aversion to unnecessary risk-taking, can hold projects and businesses together and are comfortable in jobs with an element of security.

Constructive Organiser

Constructive Organisers hold things together. They seek to bring the necessary direction and structure without which projects fail, resource is wasted and things just donâ€™t get done. These people are good at jobs involving project management, setting up systems and directing people, as long as they donâ€™t become too controlling.

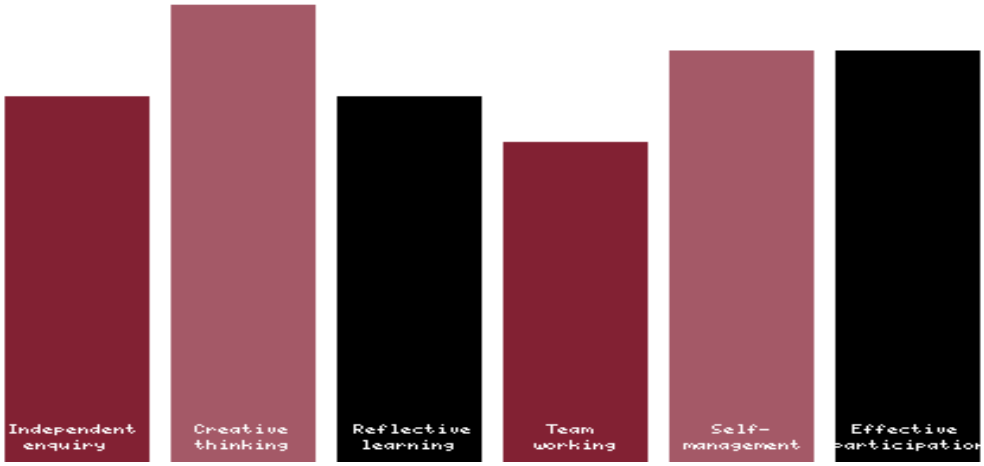
Engager

Engagers tend to know lots of people and can be quite sociable. They seem to pride themselves upon building a network of useful contacts and knowing who needs to be known. They are often friendly and good to have in teams. They excel in work which involves team work, meetings, getting out and about, but at times can find it difficult to find focus.

Concluding Achiever

Concluding Achievers prioritise getting the job done. They often have a practical focus. Finishing projects and delivering what has been asked for is what drives them. They ensure targets are clear and achieved and are well suited to work that places a strong emphasis upon getting the job done. Occasionally they donâ€™t involve other people enough.

personal learning and thinking skills:



Independent Enquiry

You seem to understand the importance of solving problems and finding good solutions, but donâ€™t always focus as much attention upon this really important quality as you could. This is a life skill that has implications way beyond school and college. It is a key quality that will help you at work and in building your career â€“ remember that everyone wants a solution, no matter what problems they face.

Creative Learning

Your ability to think â€˜outside the boxâ€™ and come up with novel ideas and ways of looking at things is a real strength. Make sure you use it well by asking questions, being confident to say what you think and work out solutions that others might not see, but could be really useful.

Reflective Learning

You seem to recognise that learning is all about giving it a go, listening, taking on board what people have to say and then improving how you go about performing various tasks. The more you allow yourself to listen and think through how you can develop new skills and abilities, the more successful you are liable to be at school, college and at work.

Team Working

Your ability to listen to the views of others is very important and the more you can do to develop this skill the better. How good are you at balancing your desire to do your own thing when you are drawn into working in group and team situations? How good are you at ensuring everyone gets the opportunity to speak? Are you a potential leader?

Self management

You view yourself as someone who is able to plan and get organised and do what needs to be done. This skill will become increasingly important as you get older as you will be required to balance work, study and everything else you do. Ensure you make a choice as to what you do and donâ€™t want to do.

Effective Participation

It is important that we spend devote some time to issues that donâ€™t just affect us but also affect other people. You sem to be the type of person who could get involved in this. This is really good as it is active people like you who could make a difference.